

The Casebook of Partners

File # (0000)

1. Title of the Case: 「 Genetical Incident!! Scattered, Abandoned Pair of Socks Case.」

2. Victim (Wife)

3. Detailed Description:

Wife “I wasn’t born to pick up socks on the floor!”

Being a busy working mom, I am always irritated and frustrated when I have to pick up pair of socks my husband took off and left on the floor. He never cares. Whenever I ask him to put them in the laundry, not on the floor, he says “Oh, I was going to do it later!” Or “You know how droopy when someone asks you to do things that you’re just gonna do?”

I really want to spend my time for something more meaningful. I don’t have time and do minute-by-minute schedule every day. I don’t understand why my husband wouldn’t do such a little thing as he can in one minute, which doubles my work at home in the end?

I have no idea why my wife is always spending her time to clear up the floor. It’s just a pair of socks and doesn’t bother anything. I will do it anyway.

When I visited my husband’s parents house one day, I saw a pair of socks left on the hallway. It was my father-in-law’s. Then I saw, my mother-in-law picked it up “naturally” without any complaint. “Oh I got it.” Said I to myself. It was - “Cultural Inheritance.”

4. A Nome de Plume: (Uracchi)

5. Duration of Marriage: (8 years)

6. Age: Wife (40s) , Husband (50s)

7. Country of Residence: (Japan, Okayama)